

HOW TO GET STARTED IN FILM AND TV

If you're passionate about starting your career in the industry, take a look at our top suggestions of websites to get you started...

ScreenSkills is the industry-led skills body for the screen industries – film, television (including children's, unscripted and high-end), VFX (visual effects), animation and games. They train the people who make the shows the whole world loves and are supporting continued growth and future innovation across the country by investing in the skilled and inclusive workforce who are critical to the UK screen industries' global success. You can find information on job profiles in the industry, training and development programmes, online training, apprenticeships, training providers and much more.

Discover! Creative Careers is an initiative by the UK creative industries to make it easier for you to find careers in the creative industries. Their website and resources can help you to explore explore the hundreds of job roles available.

Take a look at My First Job in Film to find support with training and opportunities in the Film Industry. They can help you if you have little to no experience and support you into entry level roles.

Creative Access is a leading diversity, equity and inclusion organisation in the UK with deep expertise across the creative economy. They provide progressive career support and development for talent from communities under-represented in the creative industries. You can find details about traineeships, mentoring schemes, jobs and other opportunities through their website.

The Call Sheet is a job site focused on connecting talent with Film and TV productions. They also offer training through different production schemes. You can set up a free newcomer profile and browse and apply for roles.

Mandy Film & TV Production is a leading crew roles platform in the UK. They showcase crew jobs through their website. You can create a profile and apply for jobs through this platform.

