NORTH Korea has just banned some odd things.

Skinny jeans, branded T-shirts and spiky, dyed or mullet hairstyles are no longer allowed. The secretive country's news agency says the rules will stop people becoming more like those in the West.

WOW

SEVEN bears crashed a school pool party in Tennessee, USA, last week. We bet they had a 'beary' good time!

SCHOOL
AT THE BEACH!

SPANISH students are going to school on the sand!

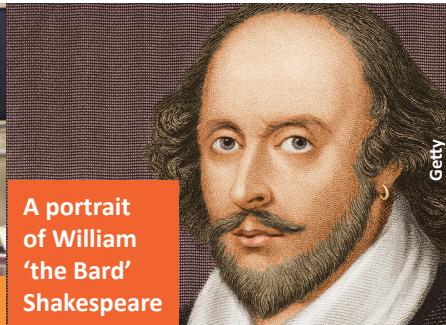

Students from Félix Rodríguez de la Fuente school in Los Nietos attended their graduation ceremony on the beach, where teachers have been holding their classes during the last year.

The open-air learning is part of the school's programme of creating healthier environments for schoolchildren during the COVID-19 pandemic.

THE WRONG WILLIAM

William 'Bill' Shakespeare gets his jab

A portrait of William 'the Bard' Shakespeare

ARGENTINIAN news station Canal 26 made a big error after a man with a well-known name sadly passed away.

William Shakespeare was the first man to get the Pfizer COVID-19 vaccine, but he died recently from an unrelated illness. As you're probably aware, Mr Shakespeare shared his name with a rather famous playwright, and that's who Canal 26 thought had died. Presenter Noelia Novillo announced the death of "one of the most important writers in the English language", unaware that the Bard had died more than 400 years ago, in 1616!

HAIR RAISING RECORD

A MAN with the Guinness World Record for the tallest fan mohawk now has the tallest spike mohawk too.

Joe Grisamore, from Minnesota, got the fan mohawk record last year with a height of 108cm (42.5in). This time, he had his hair formed into a spike. After a lot of "trial and error" and "different hairsprays", Joe and his team hit a record of 129.4cm (50.9in) tall.
