Sport Sustainability Recommendation: Men’s Gymnastics Recruiting/Access Flexibility

June 25, 2021

BACKGROUND AND CHARGE: The USOPC Think Tank charged the sport sustainability group to develop legislative proposals to help Olympic and Paralympic sports be more efficient and effective within their own sport-specific landscapes to ensure sports survive and thrive.

RECOMMENDATION: The USOPC Think Tank recommends collegiate recruiting flexibility in men’s gymnastics, including relaxed access and opportunities to collaborate across community, youth, college and USA Gymnastics programs to help sustain the sport. The following describes the type of sport policy customization that could enhance the men’s gymnastics sport pathway and ultimately grow the sport.

Amend NCAA recruiting rules to permit customized men’s gymnastics policies impacting: (1) sport camp/clinics, (2) tryouts (local sports clubs/private lessons) and (3) national team access.
INTENT	Given its significantly low sport sponsorship, men’s gymnastics seeks recruiting flexibility to increase engagement, promotion and cooperation across community/youth programs, college varsity teams and the national team. Proposed recruiting amendments include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Tryout exceptions: (a) remove the 50-mile radius limitation for local sports clubs and permit a school/booster group to sponsor and support local sports club regardless if the club includes prospects and permits coaching involvement; (b) permit men’s gymnasts staff/athletes to provide private lessons to earn revenue to offset their program’s operational costs. ● Sport camps and clinics exception: Permit men’s gymnastics to have customized engagement levels and remove attendance restrictions for prospective student-athletes to participate in camps/clinics . ● National team exceptions: Permit youth, college and national team engagement; relax opportunities for national team athletes to train/engage with college teams. NOTE: USA Gymnastics is exploring a collegiate regional development concept to aid varsity programs in supporting youth/elite development, coaching expertise and national team engagement (training/events).
RATIONALE	Current NCAA recruiting/engagement rules are widely applied to all Olympic sports to maintain competitive equity across the sport landscape. The USOPC, USA Gymnastics, Collegiate Gymnastics Association and University of Colorado, Colorado Springs, partnered to conduct a men’s gymnastics financial assessment to test the impact of expenditures on sport performance. The study found a statistically moderate (0.40) impact of recruiting expenses on team performance in men’s gymnastics. The study found many varsity programs leverage their club/camp structures to support operational costs. Thus, the CGA and school administrators believe more flexibility for men’s gymnastics is needed to ensure lasting viability, which could be achieved through further deregulation of tryout/local sports clubs, sport camps/clinics and national team engagement bylaws. These changes may allow for programs to be more self-sufficient and may help the sport grow by allowing youth to directly see the men’s gymnastics sport pathway.
IMPACT	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Estimated budget impact: The fiscal impact of these efforts will vary given the disparity of camp/clinic and local sports club operations across schools (camp revenues range from $0-$279,000; clubs revenue ranges from $0-$266,760); however, deregulation can help men’s gymnastics coaches/administrators operate within their campus structures and construct meaningful partnerships within their communities [UCCS Financial Study]. ● Impact on student-athletes: These proposed changes would enhance the student-athlete experience by easing and elevating engagement between youth and elite athletes for the sake of saving and advancing the sport. More interaction may increase the fan base and elevate exposure of the sport. ● Impact on prospective student-athletes: Prospective student-athletes would have more opportunities to advance their skills by training alongside college and/or elite athletes. Additionally, they would gain exposure to college programs and may remain in the sport for longer by understanding the development pathway.
