PARALYMPIC HISTORY

Father of the Paralympic Movement

DR. LUDWIG Guttman

Professor Sir Ludwig 'Poppa' Guttman, CBE, FRS, is known as the father of the Paralympic Movement; he was the medical pioneer who proved that disabled sport could be as competitive and exciting as non-disabled sport. In September 1943, he took charge of the National Spinal Injuries Unit at Stoke Mandeville. He implemented his own theories on how best to treat patients who had paraplegia by introducing rehabilitation through sport. This led to national competitions, then to the International Stoke Mandeville Games and finally the Paralympic Games. The Paralympic Games has become the third largest sporting event in the world.

Ludwig Guttman was born on the 3rd of July 1899, the eldest child of four, in Tost, Upper Silesia in Germany (which is now Toszek in Poland), and raised in the Jewish faith. He started studying medicine at the University of Breslau in 1918 after he was turned down for military service on medical grounds. He continued his studies in Würzburg and Freiburg and received his Doctorate in Medicine in 1924, writing his thesis on tumors of the trachea.

“If ever I did one good thing in my medical career it was to introduce sport into the treatment and rehabilitation programme of spinal cord sufferers and other severely disabled.” - Dr. Ludwigg Guttman

---

Having returned to Breslau, he worked with Europe's leading neurologist Professor Otrid Foerster from 1924 to 1928. In 1928, Guttman was invited to start a neuro-surgical unit in Hamburg but this post only lasted a year as Foerster asked him to return to Breslau as his first assistant – a job Guttman felt he could not refuse. He remained in this job until 1933 when, under the Nuremberg Law, the Nazis forced all Jews to stop practicing medicine at Aryan hospitals. Under such oppression, Guttman became neurologist to the Jewish Hospital in Breslau and was elected Medical Director of the whole hospital in 1937.

On the 9th of November 1938 (Kristallnacht), Guttman gave orders that any male person entering the hospital was to be treated, despite the racial laws specifying that Jewish doctors could only treat Jewish patients. The following morning, he had to justify the large number of admissions (64 patients) to the SS and the Gestapo.

Like all Jews, Guttman's passport had been confiscated and he was not allowed to travel; however, in December 1938 he was ordered by von Ribbentrop to travel to Lisbon, Portugal, to treat a friend of the dictator, Salazar. On his return journey he was granted permission to go to England for two days. He was already in contact with the British Society for the Protection of Science and Learning and was offered a grant. He decided to emigrate with his wife and two children.

Eva Loeffler, Guttman's daughter remembers, “It was 1939 and I was six years old. I remember I was abnormally frightened at the time; I used to cry a lot. Even as a small child I picked up the fear and sadness felt by my parents. Although Jews were allowed to take out some furniture, clothes and linen they were not allowed to take any money, gold silver or jewelry. But the official who was supervising us came round the day before and told my mother ‘I shall be an hour late tomorrow’. It was obviously a hint that we might pack what we wanted; but my mother was too frightened to take anything forbidden as she thought it could be a trap.”

At the 1956 International Stoke Mandeville Games, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) awarded Guttman the Sir Thomas Fearnley Cup for his service to the Olympic movement.

The Guttman family left Germany on the 14th of March 1939, and went to Oxford where the family found a small house to live in. Guttman was working at the Radcliffe Infirmary and at St Hugh's College Military Hospital for Head Injuries. In 1943 he was asked by the Government to become Director of the new National Spinal Injuries Centre at the Emergency Medical Services Hospital at Stoke Mandeville. He accepted the post on the condition that he could treat patients in his own way with no interference.

The new Spinal Injuries Unit was opened at Stoke Mandeville Hospital in February 1944 with Dr Guttman in charge. It had 24 beds and one patient. It was initially very poorly resourced but the medical need was clear; within six months Guttman had nearly 50 patients.

When Ludwig Guttman started work at the Spinal Injuries Centre at Stoke Mandeville, life expectancy for paraplegics was only two years from the time of injury. Guttman refused to accept that a spinal injury was a death sentence, and his advancements in the treatment of paraplegia have revolutionized the field. He influenced and taught a whole generation of physicians from all over the world in his methods, and centers were established worldwide (including those named after him in Barcelona, Heidelberg and in Israel).

An important part of the treatment was to ensure that patients maintained some hope of making progress and returning to their previous life. Patients took part in activities to keep them active – a social rehabilitation as well as a medical one. Workshops where the patients could do woodwork and clock and watch repairing were set up in the hospital. But it was the encouragement of sporting activities that was to make the greatest impact on the wards. The first sport was wheelchair polo using walking sticks and a puck, but this was soon replaced by wheelchair basketball. Archery was also popular; it relied on upper body strength which meant that paraplegics could compete with their non-disabled counterparts, and it was archery that was the first competitive sport at the Stoke Mandeville Games in 1948.

At the 1956 International Stoke Mandeville Games, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) awarded Guttman the Sir Thomas Fearnley Cup for his service to the Olympic movement.

Following his retirement from the Spinal Injuries Centre in 1966, Guttman continued to be heavily involved with the Games and the national and international organizations, both sports and medical. That year he was knighted by Her Majesty the Queen, becoming Sir Ludwig Guttman. In 1969, following fundraising to cover the cost of the building works, a new sports center was opened by Queen Elizabeth II on the Stoke Mandeville Hospital grounds, later renamed 'Ludwig Guttman Sports Centre for the Disabled' after his death.

As well as his involvement with the Games, he continued to travel and lecture on spinal injuries all over the world, continuing to educate and influence others with his theories and methods. However, it was his leadership of the disabled sports organizations that occupied him through the late 1960s and 1970s. It was in the 1970s that Guttman spear-headed the conversations with the International Olympic Committee about the use of the term 'Olympic' and the name of the various organizations – conversations that directly led the way to the close relationship with the IOC and the later establishment of the International Paralympic Committee.

“After injury Guttman focussed an individual’s mind on what they can do rather than regretting what they can no longer do. Through sport Guttman gave that person back the will to live a full life with pride and self-respect.”

- Bob Paterson, International Wheelchair and Amputee Sports Federation (IWAS)

Sir Ludwig Guttman died on the 18th of March 1980 of heart failure following a heart attack some months before. He did not live to see his vision realized, but his work continues through the current disabled sports organizations and through the National Spinal Injuries Centre at Stoke Mandeville, which continues to be a world leader in the treatment of spinal injuries.

It was Sir Ludwig Guttman’s drive and determination for disabled sportsmen and women to be included in the Olympics that gives us the Paralympic Games today. The London 2012 Paralympic Games showed how close the world has got to Guttman’s vision with the Olympic Games and Paralympic Games being organized in tandem.

“THE OLYMPICS IS WHERE
HEROES ARE CREATED.
THE PARALYMPICS IS WHERE THE HEROES COME.”
