Introduction

Portfolio diversification is generally thought of in terms of market capitalization and investment style, yet sector diversification is equally important. Pursuing a growth investment style via technology stocks leads to substantially different portfolios—and results—than pursuing growth via healthcare stocks.

In 2011, Morningstar introduced a new sector structure that is more logical, allows for intelligent diversification, and makes it easier to understand the decisions being made by portfolio managers.

It divides the stock universe into three major economic spheres, or Super Sectors: cyclical, defensive, and sensitive. Within each of these Super Sectors, we define three groups for defensive and four groups each for cyclical and sensitive for a total of 11 sectors. Industry groups and specific industries within each sector permit further analysis, resulting in a unified system that applies to stocks, funds, and portfolios. Investors can quickly evaluate the similarities and differences of funds and portfolios by comparing exposure to the three Super Sectors, but they can also further examine holdings at a very granular level.

Building on this structure, in 2019, Morningstar is making revisions on the industry group and industry level in response to market and technology changes. The revised system calibrates the classifications to align more closely with industry standards, clarifies industry definitions, and better reflects industry trends to allow for a more accurate grouping of companies based on market behavior.

Platform Structure

The platform structure is a single, unified scheme, with the Morningstar equities universe forming its base. These equities are mapped into their appropriate industries, and the industries themselves are mapped into industry groups. These industry groups are then rolled into sectors. Finally, the sectors are consolidated into Super Sectors.

Industries

Each equity is mapped into one of 145 industries, the one that most accurately reflects the company’s underlying business. This mapping is based on publicly available information about each company and uses annual reports, Form 10-Ks, and Morningstar Equity Analyst input as its primary source.

Secondary sources of information may include company websites, sell-side research, and trade publications.

Industry Groups

Industries are subsequently mapped into 55 industry groups based on their common operational characteristics. If a particular industry has unique operating characteristics—or simply lacks commonality with other industries—it would map into its own group.

However, any industry group containing just a single industry does not necessarily imply that that industry is dominant or otherwise important. The assignment simply reflects the lack of a sufficient amount of shared traits among industries.

Sectors

Industry groups are folded into the following 11 sectors:

- Basic Materials
- Communication Services
- Consumer Cyclical
- Consumer Defensive
- Energy
- Financial Services
- Healthcare
- Industrials
- Real Estate
- Technology
- Utilities

Super Sectors

Sectors are consolidated into three Super Sectors: cyclical, defensive, and sensitive.

Cyclical

The cyclical Super Sector includes industries significantly affected by economic shifts. When the economy is prosperous, these industries tend to expand, and when the economy is in a downturn they tend to shrink. In general, the stocks in these industries have betas of greater than 1.

Defensive

The defensive Super Sector includes industries that are relatively immune to economic cycles. These industries provide services that consumers require in both good and bad times, such as healthcare and utilities. In general, the stocks in these industries have betas of less than 1.

Sensitive

The sensitive Super Sector includes industries that ebb and flow with the overall economy, but not severely. Sensitive industries fall between defensive and cyclical, as they are not immune to a poor economy, but they also may not be as severely affected as industries in the cyclical Super Sector. In general, the stocks in these industries have betas that are close to 1.

These Super Sectors are a broader representation of Morningstar sectors.

Mapping Rules and Maintenance

Mapping Rules

Equity industry assignment is based on very transparent rules. By and large, equities are mapped into the industries that best reflect each company's largest source of revenue and income. If the company has more than three sources of revenue and income and there is no clear dominant revenue or income stream, the company is assigned to the conglomerates industry. We also consider business descriptions, assets, and competitors when revenue does not paint a clear picture.

Maintenance

Based on Morningstar analyst research or third-party information, Morningstar may change industry assignments to more accurately reflect the changing businesses of companies. All the companies are reviewed at least annually and whenever there is a major corporate action for them.
