EVOLUTION OF THE M&P® PISTOL

Considered the most important handgun ever produced by the company, the Smith & Wesson .38 Military & Police revolver is the earliest model that remains in continuous production. Since 1899, over six million units have been produced and sold worldwide to law enforcement organizations, military agencies and to private citizens.

Built in 1899, the .38 Military & Police was originally designed to fire the .38 U.S. Service Cartridge (.38 Long Colt). However, D.B. Wesson wanted the handgun to be more powerful than the Colt and suggested lengthening the cartridge case to increase both the powder charge and bullet weight. The new and powerful cartridge would be known as the .38 S&W Special and fired from the 'M&P' revolver. Everything about this revolver was innovative, from its solid frame and its hand ejector system to the cartridges it fired. The M&P, now known as the Model 10, was an immediate success. The sheer firepower of the handgun, which could shoot through nearly seven and a half inches of solid pine, made it a formidable weapon for crime fighting.

For over a century, the Smith & Wesson M&P has been carried by law enforcement and military agencies around the world. Never in the history of firearms has any model been in continual production so long, serving the government, law enforcement and the people for which it was designed.

After more than a century of successful service from the Smith & Wesson Military & Police Model 10 revolver, the M&P line was developed, and now offers pistols, revolvers and rifles that bear the M&P name.

The M&P pistol series, introduced in 2005, was engineered to become the handgun of choice for global law enforcement and military personnel. The M&P pistol was designed based on input from over a dozen law enforcement and military organizations worldwide.

After several years in the hands of professional users, the Smith & Wesson engineers once again reached out to those professional users to garner new information and input, and in 2017, the M&P M2.0 pistol was born. Like its predecessor, the M&P® M2.0™ pistol series was introduced to become the pistol of choice by professional users around the globe. Smith & Wesson has taken great care to address the evolving needs of military and police, professional users and military personnel, seen in nearly every facet of the M&P design. The M&P M2.0 pistol is designed to be dependable in all scenarios – it's lightweight, high capacity, extremely rugged, and capable of functioning flawlessly – no matter what the situation demands.

By answering the need for a more durable, versatile, high-performance firearm, Smith & Wesson once again proves that it is dedicated to our military, police and professional personnel. This dedication is as strong now as it was over 100 years ago.
