

CME Mission Statement

The ACR's CME purpose is to provide comprehensive education to improve the knowledge, competence, performance of physicians, scientists and other health professionals who treat/care for patients with/at risk for musculoskeletal diseases as well as systemic autoimmune disorders. The ACR will offer evidence-based educational activities designed to enhance practice performance and ultimately, improve the quality of care in those with or at risk for musculoskeletal diseases as well as systemic autoimmune disorders.

The ACR's primary CME audience is its membership, including physicians, health professionals, and scientists.

The ACR's CME activities/educational interventions will result in improved competence and/or performance of the learner. The ACR will determine the impact of its CME activities/educational interventions by analyzing data obtained from self-assessment activities and learner evaluations, by assessing change in learners during skill training sessions, and/or by linking learners' practice performance directly to a rheumatology-specific quality indicator.

Most recently reviewed and amended by the ACR Committee on Education: 01/19 (Amended to align with ACCME simplification) Reviewed and approved by the ACR Board of Directors: 02/19