

Application for ACR International Adviser, 2024–2026 term

The ACR Global Engagement Committee aims to establish an International Adviser Network to increase awareness of ACR programs and opportunities that are available to the international rheumatology community, to help inform development of the ACR’s global engagement activities, and to identify potential new areas for collaboration.

International Advisers (IAs) are the ACR’s local representatives around the world, engaging with international members, colleagues and organisations and helping to identify meaningful opportunities for collaboration. They provide advice and guidance on a range of professional, education and training, and socio-cultural issues, giving insight into health systems and local epidemiology. International Advisers must be members of the ACR or ARP, in good standing, with a commitment to the work and mission of the ACR. Appointments are voluntary and made for a three-year term subject to an annual review. Please review role description for responsibilities, time commitments and terms.
